

Planning an Intergenerational Event

What is the benefit of an intergenerational event?

What are the biggest faith influences in an adolescent's life? The following quote from Transitions, a CBOQ resource on faith formation in children and youth, emphasizes the importance of community in the faith journey of a young person. "It's clear, both biblically and anecdotally that people need one another. It is part of our social needs. However, this isn't just a community of similarly aged peers. Intergenerational friendships are vital in both the practice and journey of faith. They allow for a broader understanding of how faith is lived and provide a unique support that's different from parental or same-age peer relationships. 'Hemorrhaging Faith' (a 2012 Canadian study about why young people leave the church) found that being in a mentoring relationship was the key driver to establishing and maintaining intergenerational relationships."¹

This is a compelling reason to help children and youth experience community within the church body. They need a place where they are known for who they are. The first step is to provide places where meaningful friendships can develop across generations which can lead to one-on-one mentoring relationships. This development of intergenerational mentoring relationships will take time as well as the input and support of your leadership team and your church community.

In many churches, the programming is done in 'silos' since activities and teaching are delivered according to age groups. For example, there are activities for children up to grade 5, some for youth, and still others for adults. We're looking for something where the church family (people of all ages and from a variety of family units) come together in worship or activity.

Recognize that by hosting an intergenerational event you are creating the building blocks to meaningful and intentional relationships for individuals across all generations.

Are you looking to plan an intergenerational event? Let's get started. Some practical suggestions are listed below. This will be followed by specific examples and templates you can modify and adapt to fit your ministry context .

What is the purpose of YOUR intergenerational event?

It is helpful to put together your own list of reasons why you want an intergenerational event. The way forward will be a lot of work and you may encounter obstacles that discourage you but if you can measure your progress against your goals you will be encouraged and want to keep going. Your church may find these suggested outcomes helpful in your planning.

- Develop community which is inclusive and multigenerational.
- Plan interaction of people from all generations with the purpose of developing relationships across- the-generations.
- Provide an opportunity to interact together around spiritual teaching with a Christ centered theme.
- Enjoy varied contemporary worship.
- Listen to life stories.
- Events will be informal and fun

- There will be a meaningful role for people of all generations

Things to consider when planning activities:

1. Plan a theme and related activities that address real needs or issues in people's lives.
2. How you will address the differing developmental stages represented by the multigenerational group.
3. How long will each activity take? How will it work with the varying ages of participants.?
4. How will you create space for interaction across the generations? Eg: You don't want people to just seek out their own peers. Can you create games and activities where people are paired cross-generationally?
5. Evaluate the amount of mobility required for each activity to include everyone. Eg: there may be different tasks within an activity that allows a young child or someone in a wheelchair to participate as well as an active 10-year-old.
6. Be sure to give the 'right to pass' to everyone.
7. How will you handle very young children who may need a spot to retreat to?
8. Think about providing child friendly food.

Building blocks of an intergenerational program:

1. Gather a team of people who can develop the concept and flesh out the goals.
2. Determine if there are partners or volunteers who will further the progress and vision. How will you recruit them? What, if any, training is needed for them?
3. Once the event is planned, create a team to help you execute this event. It will be helpful if your team has individuals of all ages.
4. Determine location, day of the week, time of day, length of time.
5. Advertising: How will you let possible participants know about it?
6. Determine the types of activities:
 - a. Icebreaker or gathering place which allows people to arrive and be engaged right away.
 - b. Food
 - i. Will you plan a snack or meal?
 - ii. What setup will you have? Long tables, round tables, blankets for picnic or some other arrangement.
 - c. Worship
 - i. Music – think about how the music will engage children, teens and older participants. This will help you choose music from a variety of styles and could include contemporary, traditional, new, or familiar, background music and/or participatory songs.
 - ii. Prayer - be creative allowing people to express short prayers that are non-threatening for those who are not accustomed to praying out loud. For example, you may want to try prayer stations or hot potato prayers (as a person catches a ball or balloon they call out a sentence prayer or praise).
 - iii. Message - storytelling, testimonies, spiritual story books, videos, stories of great people of the faith.
 - iv. Stations with activities
 1. Give choices and invite people of all ages to engage in any of the activities. Potential activities can include crafts, building items, games, cooking, teaching a skill ...the ideas are endless.

Note: Think about designing some activities that are appealing to both men and women as well as those who are younger and older.

Volunteers:

Help your volunteers catch the vision of what you are trying to accomplish.

You will need to include the following volunteer roles:

1. People to develop and execute the program/ activity.
2. Greeters / those who can mingle to make sure everyone feels welcome, can give instructions as needed, can connect people.
3. Volunteers who plan meals and do preparation and clean up.
4. Volunteers who do set up / take down.
5. Speaker or storyteller.
6. Musicians.
7. People with technical skills who can run the audio-visual equipment.

After your event is done!

Evaluate! Did you fulfil your purpose? Was it a good experience for people of each age group? What worked? What needs improvement?

You will find that success breeds success. People will let others know by word of mouth that it is worthwhile to participate and encourage others to attend the next one.
